

Professional Responsibility Concerns

If an Employee is unable to provide safe, quality care because of short-staffing, a new administrative responsibility, or any other reason, one way to protect herself is by filing a Professional Responsibility Concern (PRC). A PRC gives the Employee a venue to document any concern relative to patient/resident/client care, including staffing issues.

If concerns occur more than once, Employees are encourage to continue documenting and filing PRCs. Multiple PRCs will help to document the extent or recurrence of a problem.

Employees all over Alberta have used the documentation created through PRC forms to demonstrate to Employers that changes are needed. Time and again, Employees have improved the safety of care by documenting problems through the PRC process.
